1. Read and find the Infinitives and Infinitive constructions.

As medical science progresses, we are becoming an increasingly elderly society and, although living to a ripe old age can only be a good thing, it brings with it a large number of problems that we have yet to deal with properly. One such problem is that the burden of financing care for the elderly seems to be falling on a reduced percentage of the working population. The gradual but steady trend towards smaller families is likely to result in a smaller number of people to pay for the requirements of an increasingly elderly population. The services needed by the elderly appear to have stretched to breaking point. Nursing homes, homecare, meals on wheels and so on all need more investment if we wish our elderly to live as fulfilled and independent a life as possible.

Young people today are encouraged to start saving with personal pension schemes as early as possible to ensure an adequately financed retirement, since it is predicted that state pension levels in the future will not be enough to guarantee a continuation of the lifestyle they have become accustomed to. But we still have to cope with an expanding older population who are discovering too late that the steps they had taken to guarantee an income for their later years were not sufficient. Obviously, the pressure on public funds to subsidize this shortfall is enormous.

40. A) Read what Ida James says about her childhood. Underline the infinitives after let, make, forbid and force.

“Did I have a strict upbringing? No, I don't think so. I remember my parents made me promise not to speak to strangers, and they forbade me to go to a friend’s house straight from school. I always had to go home first. But then my mother usually let me go out and see my friends. When I was older, they didn’t allow me to go out with a young man on my own, but they let me go out with a group of friends. And they never allowed me to stay out after midnight. But that was accepted at the time.

I think, if you force children to do things all the time, eventually they'll rebel. One of my friends did.

B) Now write an article about Ida’s childhood. Each sentence should contain a passive form.

Model: Mrs. Ida James told me that she was made to promise not to speak to strangers, and she …

46. Translate the following passage into English using Complex Subject with the expression ‘to be likely’.

Мысль о том, что психическая неуравновешенность и творчество связаны между собой, не нова. В течение последних 30 лет психологи исследовали эту взаимосвязь и пришли к выводу, что писатели более других подвержены депрессии, у художников вероятность раздвоения личности возрастает в 3 раза, а ученые в 10 раз чаще других страдают от депрессии.

Однако, исследование характеров 400 эксцентрических личностей выявило, что все они уверены в себе, здоровы и любопытны, хотя иногда имеют склонность увлекаться несколькими разными вещами одновременно. Это любопытство, как они сами считают, и есть их рецепт счастья. Их дух приключений и воображение, вероятно, защищают их от «реального» мира и являются одним из способов бегства от жизни.

49. Read the statements in this questionnaire, complete them with the correct form of the infinitive; express your opinion on the statements.

Are we too soft with our children?

Many people today argue that half the problems with the young go back to their early years. Some say their parents and schools have been too soft, others that they’ve been too hard. What do you think?

1. Schools should make pupils (wear) uniform.
2. Parents should force their children (take) regular exercise.
3. Young girls shouldn’t be allowed (wear) make up.
4. Teachers shouldn’t let their students (eat).
5. Parents should co-operate with schools and force their children (do) their homework.
6. Schools should make all pupils (do) sports.
7. Parents are right to forbid their children (go) in the evenings during the week.
8. Parents should never allow their children (go) holiday with friends unaccompanied.
9. Parents should not make their children (study) on Sundays.
10. Parents are right to let their children (wear) what they want at weekends.

50. a) Read the text.

(1) Most cases of rage are fuelled by excessive drinking and on-board incidents are becoming more severe, researchers have discovered. (2) Cabin crews placed alcohol at the top of a list of factors that trigger attacks on planes. (3) The study by London University concluded that policies and regulations in place were still insufficient to deal with air rage. (4) Professor Rob Bor, author of the study, said: “Airlines must warn passengers about how air crew will respond to violent or threatening behaviour. (5) A zero-tolerance approach across all airlines must be implemented and all passengers must be reminded that they are required to assist crew to restrain a violent passenger. (6) He said that the policy at some airlines of allowing pilots or other members of the flight deck crew to get involved was dangerous as any injuries they suffered could leave them unable to fly aircraft. (7) The survey found that more than a third of airlines had no formal training to prevent and manage air rage. (8) One crew member told the researchers: “many passengers board the aircraft either drunk or looking to fight; then the crew has to deal with it.” (9) A former flight attendant for Kuwait Airways, which operates a non-alcohol policy, said passengers much better behaved when drink was not available. (10) “Without alcohol it’s definitely more relaxed and people are less aggressive. When you are working on a dry airline there is peace of mind – you don’t think something’s going to flare up all the time.” (11) Other main triggers for air rage found in the survey were demanding or intolerant personalities, timetable delays, the stress of air travel and smoking bans.

58. Read the text, fill in the gaps with proper forms of the infinitive.

Urban decay is when parts of the city become run-down and undesirable ………………… (live in). People have ………………… (live) in cramped conditions or slums - houses with outside toilets, without hot water or central heating. At the same time, there are empty buildings, which are vandalized or derelict gap sites where buildings have been pulled down. As factories and housing are in the same areas, air and water pollution is common.

There are a number of schemes ………………… (reduce) the problems of urban decay. One of them is comprehensive redevelopment when you knock down all the buildings and start from scratch. It is felt ………………… (need) in places where the problems are especially bad. Old houses are usually replaced by new flats and multi-storey high-rise buildings. This approach is often criticized as it destroys the social fabric of the area - people no longer know their neighbors, they are uprooted and moved away from their friends and relations.

Another solution is urban regeneration. Its idea is ………………… (renovate) the existing housing and improve the environment and economy. It may involve new roofs, rewiring the houses and fitting central heating, double glazing and the like, combining two small flats into a larger one, improving the environment by landscaping, encouraging businesses ………………… (set up) in the areas with grants and loans. This has proved more popular as people are not rehoused and are able ………………… (stay) in their own area.

BLAIR TO POSE FOR HOLIDAY PICTURES

Tony Blair did a surprise U-turn yesterday and agreed to a family photo-shoot at the start of his holiday. Twenty-four hours earlier, the Prime Minister had refused to pose for pictures with wife Cherie and their four children. They were furious that newspapers had published pictures on Sunday and Monday of their baby Leo’s christening.

It appeared they take their revenge by calling off the now traditional photo session at the start of their three-week break in Italy and France. But late yesterday the spokesman for the Premier reported that the family would turn out for cameras after all. He said the Blairs wished their children to be able to grow up without the constant attention of the media. “However, they accept that there is bound to be interest in their family. It is clear the media would like some kind of photocall at the start of the family holiday. The Prime Minister and Mrs. Blair are happy to do this. Then they continue their holiday in private. The most constructive way to keep the balance between privacy and public interest in photos of the family is for them to make pictures during the first few days of their holiday.”

It is thought that the Blairs realised they could face three weeks of unwanted attention from photographers if they didn't agree.

LOST ON A CALM DARK SEA

At 5:33 on a sunny Friday afternoon nine days ago, Mrs. Clackson, the wife of an experienced, 58-year-old sailor Adam Clackson, called the coastguard station and said he had left the Dutch coast four days earlier to sail his yacht, the Tuila, across the North Sea. Since then the craft and its crew of three more people had not appeared.

For the coastguards, and the families of the four crew, last Saturday morning brought a brief moment of hope. First, a crew of the coastguards’ plane said they had seen red cushions similar to those on board the yacht floating on the waves. It turned out that they were brightly painted timbers. Then it seemed that a gas bottle from the Tuila was spotted. It turned out that it was lobster pots (корзина для ловли омаров). A child’s shoe was reported – and even found by a helicopter – but had nothing to do with the missing yacht. They thought they had seen a life-raft. It turned out to be a clutch of party balloons bobbing on the calm sea.

So what had happened to the Tuila? The brutal truth is that nobody knows. There is only a slim chance that the yacht might be drifting, hundreds of miles off course. The photographs of the Tuila show that it had not been fitted with the special radar reflector. It also appeared that the Tuila hadn’t had emergency radio beacon which could send out a distress signal. Though the wife thinks that Clackson was given one. It is impossible to know what happened in the North Sea 10 days ago, but everyone agreed that the most likely explanation was that the Tuila was simply run over by a big vessel.

B) Make statements about the matter using different infinitive patterns.

Model: Mrs. Clackston is known to have reported the disappearance of her husband.

THE DAY AFTER, AND THE FULL HORROR EMERGES: 70 DEAD, 100 STILL MISSING

The full scale and horror of train disaster was emerging last night as the death toll passed 70, with a further 100 people still unaccounted for. If the worst fears of officials are realised, the crash would be the most serious in Britain for more than 80 years. Whilst police hope the 100 people report as possible having joined the two trains turn up safe and well, they admit the death toll is likely to rise still further.

One of the few people to have escaped from the first class carriage said last night he saw only “four or five” others struggle free. There are a hundred others reported as missing and police are trying to trace them down.

Amid growing public anger over Tuesday morning’s crash, it emerged yesterday that the driver of one of the other two trains involved had qualified just two months before. It said that Michael Hodder drove his train (Thames Trans turbo service) through a red light just minutes after leaving station and seconds before colliding with the packed rush-hour express heading into London at 8 a.m.

The Government has announced they will definitely hold a full public inquiry into the accident. The railway company released a statement that appeared to admit that the Thames Trains serviced was responsible for the accident. The statement reads: “Investigations will now concentrate on the behaviour of the Thames Turbo train following reports that it had passed a signal at danger (a red stop signal).”

A railtrack source later admitted that there were, in effect, just two possible causes of the accident – a failure of the brakes on the Thames Trains service or else error on the part of Mr Hodder. However, the train drivers union pointed out that the drivers leaving Paddington could hardly see the signal because of its location. This claim has been made for several years.

Around 40 survivors remained in hospital last night. Hospital said it had received a number of calls from increasingly desperate families asking them to check the patients’ lists as they had still not heard from relatives, and they believe the relatives were on the trains. A number of walking wounded who had discharged themselves following the accident had returned to hospital suffering from shock.

The worst rail disaster in Britain this century was in 1915 when two trains collided, killing 227. In 1952 112 people were killed and 340 hurt when two express trains collided and a third ran into the wreckage at Harrow in London.

B) Make statements about the matter using different infinitive patterns.

Model: The train drivers union pointed out that the drivers leaving Paddington could hardly see the signal because of its location.

The train drivers union pointed out that the signal's location made it difficult for it to be seen by drivers leaving Paddington.

To

In order to enjoy a full life in ones later years, it is vital maintaining close relationships and to keep physically active. To involve oneself in absorbing interests is important, as this involvement encourages a person to expanding and engage in healthy activity.

There is example after example to illustrates how rewarding life can be at an older age. For instance, an elderly widower in California has learned how to knitting, an activity that allows him not only artistic expression, but also opportunities meeting women available for to socialize with. Now he is so often invited dine at ladies' homes that he hasn’t needed cook a meal in four months. In New York State, a seventy-two-year-old grandmother took up to run six years ago and last year ran all twenty-six miles of the New York Marathon. This year she expects being awarded a prize for having made the most improvement in speed within one year. A Canadian couple that developed their lifelong interest in to ice skate into the most successful skating school in eastern Ontario, and they are preparing open another school near Boston. In California, a ninety-two-year-old woman who is a Scrabble champion wrote a how-to book on the subject, and she volunteers teach less accomplished players her strategies. These and other examples serve demonstrate that a can-do attitude leads to a rewarding life. Elders should be encouraged accept realistic challenges like these.

To having regular and strenuous activities is important, even for people in their eighties and nineties. It's never too late to begin physical training. The older person who does so, however, should not hope attain the strength or endurance he or she had in midlife; it is enough just work out for twenty-five minutes three times a week. It would not be realistic suddenly be able to go to downhill ski or tango dance, but one might certainly expect being able to walk a little farther and breathe a little easier with regular conditioning.

As for physical living arrangements, older people are often better off living alone, rather than with their children. Even people with impaired health often can manage live alone. If an older person needs help with housekeeping, he or she should arrange to have this help.

To summarize, senior citizens are often advised taking life easy, but this advice is clearly wrong. Older people should avoid to be alone and should be as social as possible. They can and should have friendships, participate in rewarding activities, and lead active and healthy lives.

The Last Word: Money Can Buy Happiness

Money can’t buy happiness, right? Wrong. John Silveira argues that happiness is up for grabs - if you can afford it.
Who is known (1-say) a hundred years ago that “Money can’t buy happiness, it can’t buy health, and it can’t buy love”? History turns out (2-demonstrate) the opposite.

First, the well-off seem (3-be) more optimistic about their lives. Optimism is a major factor in happiness. Second, medical evidence shows those with money live longer, healthier lives than those with less. About 17,000 civil servants are said (4-follow) in a survey conducted at University College London. All are well educated and have the same access to health care. Yet the clerks at the bottom of the income scale have triple the mortality rate as those at the top. Third, a 1998 survey conducted by the magazine Town & Country shows that the well-to-do tend (5-have) better marriages, are happier with friends they make, and find their jobs more interesting. I know we’ve been made (6-think) differently, but it just isn’t true.

These studies come as no surprise to me. I believe money (7-buy) happiness for many people so far and (8-continue) doing so. I insist money can make you (9-live) happier lives because it turns out (10-represent) convenience and time. By convenience I mean that more of the necessities in life are readily available to you. When I say you can buy time, I mean time in two senses: First, because your health improves and you are likely (11-buy) a few more good years of life. Second, every time I write a cheque to the guy who mows my lawn, I am literally buying his time. How much do the experts say is enough? Why not (12-measure) it? Is it worth (13-try) to reach the top? It was discovered that about 1.5 million tax-free American dollars moved most people into the top 2% on the happiness scale. However, this is not (14-say) that you can only be happy if you are loaded. Lots of poor people are perfectly content.

Nor does wealth guarantee happiness. The above survey is full of examples of people who turned out (15-lazy about) after becoming filthy rich. One, Dawn Wilby, won £4 million and was unhappy until she took a job for £12,000 a year. She hadn’t realized that you can’t just lie there and expect happiness (16-come) to the door. You’ve got to do something (17-get) the benefit of your wealth. Years ago I read an article about lottery winners and one fellow who said he was made (18-feel) unwanted and unwelcome after he refused (19-give) people loans they had been asking for. That is not unhappiness; that is annoyance. It is like complaining about mosquitoes when you take a trip to Hawaii.

But the last word on this comes from my friend, Cathy. When she heard me (20-say) this, she said, “Anyone who thinks money can’t buy happiness is either a master of self-deception or just doesn’t know where to shop.”

Communicative task

Grown-ups!

Vocabulary
Verbs: asked, told, taught, advised, brought up, encouraged, expected, warned, allowed, forbidden, supposed, forced

Comments
This fluency-building activity invites learners to share and discuss their growing-up experiences while practising passives followed by infinitives, as in I wasn’t allowed to smoke. Its design guarantees that everyone will have an equal opportunity to prepare for and initiate discussion. In addition to exposing learners to a variety of verbs used in this construction and focusing on its meaning, it is great for promoting class rapport.

Language output
A: When I was a teenager, I was asked to pay for part of our household expenses.
B: I wasn’t asked to pay for any expenses, but I was expected to share in the household chores.

Procedures
1. Before class, take copies of the worksheet, one for every student. Then, cut off the grid at the bottom of the worksheets, and reserve one for every group. Finally, cut the grids into slips and put them into bags or envelopes, again one bag or envelope for every group. Such slips are meant to ensure that all students can participate equally in the activity.

2. On the board, write down a few of the verbs from the worksheet and model the target language. Elicit from the class statements about their personal growing-up experiences, and write them on the board as well. Draw their attention to the target structure. Then, finalize with a brief discussion as to how they felt and whether they think their parents/teachers were right.

3. Divide the class into groups and hand out the material.

4. Doing the activity:
   - Individually, students fill out the chart on the worksheet by writing one sentence about themselves with each one of the verbs given.
   - In each group, students will decide who will be A, B, C and D, and write their names next to the corresponding letters just below the chart.
   - The group picks a slip from the bag or envelope. If, for example, the slip reads B2, then student B reads out his or her sentence number 2, which must contain the verb told to. The others then contribute with their own experiences, using the same verb. Finally, they discuss whether they think their parents/teachers, etc. were right, and whether they would do the same with their children/students, etc.
